The poem, Peace Anthem, has been set to music by Mr. Densmore. In 1914 bought and restored the old house called Fruitlands, now a part of personal estate at Hartford, Mass., where Bronson Alcott, with a group of English Mystics, tried to institute a new Eden upon earth. In 1920 removed from the abandoned Harvard Shaker village the oldest house built there by that sect, and placed it next to Fruitlands. In 1929 moved the oldest abandoned school house in Harvard to the Fruitlands Hill and turned it into an American Indian Museum. The three houses are now known as "The Three Wayside Museums," and are open to the public during the summer months. In 1913 a bronze statue of heroic size of the Indian, "Pumunangwet, 'He who shoots the stars,'" was unveiled outside the Indian Museum
